Report of Interactive Session

Incubation Committee of Loknete Gopinathji Munde Arts, Commerce & Science College, Mandangad has organized Interactive session on Opportunity for Reporter in the Rural Area. Shri. Joshi V.S. was the resource person for it. In his addressing, he explained one very important facet of development reporting is rural reporting. As Mahatma Gandhiji said that, most of Indians were lives in the villages, today also 60% of Indian population is either rural or semi-urban. They directly or indirectly depend upon agriculture.

It is an irony that India's villages are not getting adequate coverage in newspapers. There could be one reason that the poverty and problems in rural area do not make news for the urban population. One of the main reasons for this negligence can be that most of the newspapers of India are city based and their readers are also in cities. Especially the English dailies are urban centered and they rarely publish rural development news.

But, the local newspapers or vernacular newspapers do pay attention to the rural issues, because the large number of readers of such newspapers are either from villages or semi-urban areas.

It is only poverty, flood and other natural calamities in rural areas which get space on the front page. but there are many other stories which need to be brought into limelight like poor civic amenities, lack of basic infrastructure, any support for agriculture and other employment, poor education facilities, electricity, water supply and every basic need of the people in rural areas. Lack of such facilities in rural areas actually retards the pace of growth in our country.

So the job of rural reporter is far more than just reporting. It is a very sensible, responsible and careful job for a rural reporter. He should not only search for the stories but should also be able to handle them intelligently. He should be able to recognize the problems but also present it in such a way that everyone would like to read it and authorities are compelled to take any action. A rural reporter should be passionate enough to raise the issues and struggle for them. He should be brave, fearless and committed.

His writing should appeal to the readers with its substance, depth and style. He should compare the conditions of rural areas to the urban areas, so that people can ponder upon the disparity. To show the poverty in rural areas, he does not need to present the numbers and figures. He can do this by simply reporting the number of meals consumed by a person in rural areas, the nutrition level in it and comparing it with urban the meal of a urban person.
